| TIP While PSD files can be compressed to save disk space, they are not generally sent that way to reduce bandwidth over the internet. --- | --- NOTE Don't be concerned if the PSD format is not used widely. While it is the industry standard, it is often not the format the client requests. You are supposed to start with an original file in the TIFF format, and then edit and crop a photo until you have a resized and cropped image. If your client requests a particular size, you might resize the image in Photoshop and then crop it to that size if you like. (Retouching is the industry's term for this.) However, it is not uncommon for clients to ask for an uncropped image, sometimes with additional editing or finishing touches. Imagemagic: Similar to Photoshop, this editor is based on layers that support opacity and multi-layered editing. PaintShop Pro: Some people prefer this vector based software. It has a robust library of tools to design and edit. Adobe Illustrator: If you have a digital camera, Photoshop, or PaintShop Pro, you can import your images to this software and then use it to design and draw your images. Some people find this software more popular because it is used to design logos, Web sites, and the like. Photoshop is good for more complex images. Illustrator is good for more complex designs that include shapes and font, among other things. Conclusion: After you master the basics of Photoshop and get used to the interface, you will find that you will be creating your own resized images anyway. You can use it at any time. Fig. 14.5 : Background images (figures and photographs) can be put into Photoshop quickly and easily by selecting an object (in this case, the focal point) and using a magic wand and clicking on the spots that contain the desired image. Fig. 14.6 : After selecting the object that contains the focal point, click on the _magic wand_ tool and click on the relevant spots.

Former prosecutor Lance Russell files bankruptcy PITTSBURGH - Lawyers in the federal bankruptcy case involving former prosecutor Daniel O'Brien have set aside 20 days for argument in the courtroom. O'Brien filed for bankruptcy in November and lists assets of $8 million and debts of $10 million in a Chapter 13 petition. The case has been in the Chapter 7 division of the federal Bankruptcy Court in Pittsburgh since the day O'Brien filed. That's the quickest case to get to the court and the fastest to go to a jury trial. But there's also hope that this case is heading to trial, because a family member told a Pittsburgh Post-Gazette reporter late Wednesday that O'Brien was not going to make his first court appearance Thursday, as scheduled. Anybody who is anybody in Allegheny County knows that everyone is hoping that Daniel O'Brien will not receive a "probationary sentence." No, that is not meant in a good way. In Pittsburgh, that sentence generally means a one-year sentence of house arrest with a probation officer monitoring the home life of the defendant for the next year. That makes for an interesting season of Front Porch Forum. Just think, he can get the "help" of this probation officer 24/7 and can't forget that he has a home to visit. You wonder why there isn't a better legal mind than Daniel O'Brien in the district attorney's office. I don't care whether O'Brien is trying to get control of his home, he wants to control what others say about him. He wants to control what others think about him. Is this how he conducts his office? I'm sure O'Brien's would-be mentor and boss feels that he has won and he can forgive O'Brien for being anything but a "team" player. O'Brien's previous boss, Bob Del Greco, has let the citizens of Allegheny County down. The citizens of Allegheny County deserve better than that, as does any other citizen in any other county. We all wonder how many other criminals are running around our streets, our neighborhood, our families, our schools, our churches and our own back yards. Who is watching? Is someone else taking O'Brien's place? Is it someone from Those millions of dollars that were spent by the government and the Fed (and all the other nations) have not worked. It has made all the rich richer and all the poor poorer. It has achieved nothing. Even if you look at the BS statistics, most of the data has just made the rich richer and made the poor poorer. Not to mention, it has made stupid poor decisions, like giving it to the big banks. I think the people who were responsible are going to get their f%#&ing money back. That is, if they ever got back any of the money they stole from the people. I wish we had an official arrest order for all the criminal politicians and their criminal cronies who committed crimes against the American people in 2008 and the subsequent years. The governments loss for taking money out of the people's pockets will be trillions, instead of the trillions of dollars they have already stolen. The only way the government can steal your money is by actually stealing it at gunpoint. They could have disallowed certain from doing certain things but they have had a thousand choices on this issue. They could have put some insane nurse in charge of administering the money. But they have had a thousand choices. They could have even opted to tie goverment funding to certain economic performance requirements. But they have had a thousand choices.
