Black Snake Moan type Movie Olivia Wilde has been tapped to star in Clint Eastwood's The 15:17 to Paris, a remake of Michael Haneke's Austrian film Head On about a bomb plot aboard a train that ultimately killed eight people. The script was written by Michael Petroni and is based on Head On, a 1994 film that was directed by Austrian filmmaker Michael Haneke. The pic follows a man and a woman (played by Wilde and Dev Patel) who go on a journey, and share a love affair on a train that takes them between Oslo, Norway and Paris, France. Wilde will play the woman, and A.J. Bowen, a familiar presence in No Country for Old Men, will play the man. Filming is scheduled to begin in the fall. As we reported when the announcement first broke, Terry Gilliam is directing the film. Eastwood is producing and starring. Wilde recently completed a starring role opposite Chris Pine in Focus, which is in postproduction and will be released in September. She's currently shooting drama Motherhood with Michelle Monaghan and Dustin Lance Black for New Regency. Rounding out her slate are two features, Derrick and Guardian. She's repped by CAA and Untitled Entertainment.

With the increase in the use of digital communication systems, it is often desirable to provide a signal with a high transfer rate. For example, a picture signal of about 1,200x3x971,200 pixels requires transfer rates of 10 MHz or more. The picture signal includes a synchronization (sync) signal to synchronize the input of a start pulse of a clock signal and a picture signal, and a clock signal used to sample a picture signal. When a 1,200-line video signal including an additional line of vertical synchronization signal is compressed for transfer to a remote site at a low transmission rate, the additional line of vertical synchronization signal must be omitted, so that the received video signal must be xe2x80x9clockedxe2x80x9d to read the vertical synchronization signal. However, the general technologies, such as a digital line memory and a clock and data recovery (
