streets on Monday in defiance of a police ban to protest the Chinese flag being flown at China's representative office. Protesters wore black and held banners saying they would fight for Hong Kong's identity and protect it from Beijing's encroachment. Despite thousands of police officers and more than half a million protesters in the streets on Sunday, protesters still outnumbered police, hurling bricks, eggs and toxic waste in a spirited but largely peaceful display. Some people waved the Chinese national flag outside the office of the Chinese liaison office. The center of the protests was a water cannon outside the Liaison Office. Protesters called for an independent inquiry into the conduct of police, which has a reputation for brutal responses to protests. A planned rally in the Wan Chai neighborhood was canceled after more than 150 members of the police force participated in a second day of protests Sunday, Hong Kong public broadcaster RTHK said
