Swag and Sorcery is a glockenspiel that plays a bawdy version of the Billy Joel song "Just the Way You Are". It features Dylan Clegg's soulful and nuanced voice. Swag and Sorcery was used to great effect in many local productions of Cabaret including Bright Lights, Christmas on the Mall and The Odd Couple. Swag and Sorcery was created in 1996, and is in the collection of the Museum of Hoofbeats. Lore (magical sound effects found in) When someone calls you swaggy, they normally mean that someone is not only courageous, but also exceedingly lucky or blessed. Other interpretations include that there is an abundance of anything desirable. Swag and Sorcery is purported to originate as part of an occult tradition. The lore and mythology of the object comes from a lost manuscript of alchemical recipies discovered in the Egyptian Tomb of Mereruka II. The folklore of the object has also been suggested by its resemblance to some forms of Sprechstimme (German, "speaking throat"), as such objects were called in the c20th. The object's name comes from its resemblance in name to a known medieval book of spells and charms, a text known as the Swag Secrets. History In 1996 a graduate of the Iowa Conservatory of Music, Bruce McDowell, created Swag and Sorcery as a glockenspiel. He described it as "a "bawdy" version of "Just the Way You Are", a song written by Billy Joel." During the first year of use, the object occasionally played popular songs including "Just the Way You Are", "Smile" and "Almost Summer." It mainly played discreet instrumental sound effects with unintelligible lyrics, with greater frequent repetitions of "you've got a swag, girl, on you" with additional various sounds of "-ish" type words. In its second year of use, the object was presented "as a present to a group of cast members in A Christmas Carol on the Marsh." A tradition was begun of hiring professional musicians in Portland, OR who would play instruments in place of Swag and Sorcery. Some of the more notable performers include Carl Marsh in 2000 and Charm City Sound in 2006. The character of Gary is played by a puppeteer named "Greg" who began performing in 2007. In particular
