Note Lightroom is like a digital photo album, cataloging your images and providing a central location for managing and organizing your files. The Adobe Photoshop CS (Computer Software) program is a full-featured digital photo-retouching and composition tool that enables you to create final output images with a number of common image-editing and retouching options. Lightroom uses the same kinds of tools as Photoshop, but in a less powerful, integrated way. Lightroom can perform basic image-editing tasks, such as resizing, cropping, and sharpening, as well as retouching tasks, such as color manipulation, re-eye reduction, image enhancements, and image enhancements. It works with a collection of images. It also includes image management tools.

More than half of US tech firms suffer a data breach at least once a year, according to a new survey, underscoring the continuing prevalence of security incidents in the industry. Virtually all survey respondents who use cloud applications (93 percent) face security challenges because the attack surface is so broad, according to the IT security firm Bromium Inc., whose annual Security and Trust Report on Tuesday provides a snapshot of the current state of security in the tech industry. Cloud security itself is seen as the biggest risk by survey respondents. Last year, an online survey commissioned by Bromium found that 96 percent of IT professionals consider security as one of their company's top risks. Additionally, the top three most worrisome industry trends cited in the survey were compromised accounts (75 percent), breaches of unsecured cloud services (69 percent) and sensitive or high-value data leaks (68 percent). "We've seen a big increase in the number of industries that can suffer data leaks. That's a big shift," said Sean McGurnaghan, CTO at Bromium. More than half the respondents (54 percent) have been subject to at least one data breach in their organizations. More than half (57 percent) of the data breaches over the past five years have been caused by a high-risk vendor or a customer, up from 42 percent in the previous survey. The remaining breaches have been largely attributed to employees. Threats from insiders have diminished since last year. The number of insider threat incidents has declined over the past two years, dropping to 38 percent of incidents in 2016 from more than half (55 percent) in 2013. Meanwhile, the number of high-risk vendors — meaning both rogue hackers and criminals — has remained relatively stable, according to the survey. Meanwhile, the incidence of targeted ransomware attacks has spiked. Bromium expects that the number of ransomware events could rise 15 percent next year, with 40 percent of ransomware incidents occurring in the second quarter of 2017. "We are seeing a lot more attacks that are tied to, or are directly tied to, nation-state actors," McGurnaghan said. "It is not just targeting of individuals or individuals' systems. It's larger attacks on infrastructure." The most common way of accessing network data has been through lateral movement on the corporate network, according to the survey. The data-breach incidents that go undetected are

What's New In?

We put up a great set of photos of Jägermeister founder Erdmann Jacoby yesterday, but someone posted a GIF on Twitter that made us stop and think. It showed the company's ads on a time map, with the countries they're appearing in. It's a bit like retro tourism in space. It's incredible. We first stumbled upon it when we saw a tweet from the Colombian health minister about the marketing company that promoted a Jägermeister flavour with caffeine called "Jäger Puff on the Go". We took that to mean that rather than having the ad on Twitter, as they usually do, they were now actually promoting Colombian coffee, which would be an interesting marketing move in that country, due to the stigma some still have around both the drink and caffeine. Then this popped up. This is different. The fact that the Jägermeister ads were all here implies that it really is a tourist in space in the sense that they're promoting a drink in different countries. As someone who tried visiting various planets, an interesting one to see is the one where the "Ha!" campaign took place, which was where Jägermeister played an alien "bleep bleep" sound that sounds like a signal from a jetpack. It's the same sound they use in the new "Space Jägermeister" ad campaign we have up in the right-hand corner above. Yep, that's the exact sound! This story goes deeper than just ads on Reddit, or GIFs in Brazil. If anyone out there knows more about this, do let us know, because it's a really unusual advertising campaign.Q: SELECT CASE, how to pass the values of this query as a variable? I have a query to select case by a query. The query is OK as it runs when executed directly in SQL server. But it's not running when I run the query in access where I tried to assign the values of the query to a variable. This is my code: "IF OBJECT_ID('tempdb..#_TableName') IS NOT NULL DROP TABLE #_TableName DECLARE @dbiValue NVARCHAR(5) = CAST(@dbiValue AS VARCHAR(5))
