The first version of AutoCAD was named AutoDesk; the current name derives from an owner change in the early 1990s. Today, AutoCAD is the most widely used commercial CAD software application in the world. According to the company, AutoCAD has well over 100 million users. AutoCAD's consumer license prices range from US$1,299 to US$4,049 for an "Enterprise" package, including most of the more advanced tools and features, and the software generally costs US$9.99 per user per month or US$89.99 per user per year. There are also AutoCAD Advanced and AutoCAD LT packages for use on low-cost and low-power computers. Each user receives an individual license key that is installed on his or her computer. In the absence of a hardware or software license management system, the license key itself is required for AutoCAD to operate; hence, an individual license key can be shared with many people, as long as they all have their own hardware/software license key in addition to an individual license key. (C) AutoCAD

By contrast, the free Google Earth software is used by many individuals for basic and not-so-basic purposes, but is not included in any commercial package. Also, although Autodesk announced it would support the free Autodesk Architectural Desktop software on July 5, 2010, Autodesk later retracted that announcement.

In the 1990s, Autodesk acquired two companies, Gratis Technology and Inventech Software, and these companies created the first AutoCAD versions for DOS, OS/2 and Windows. The first public release of AutoCAD was in October 1982 on the Macintosh platform. From 1994 through 2004, AutoCAD was offered on all major platforms, including Microsoft Windows, macOS, and POSIX, as well as various operating systems for embedded microcomputers,
