About 40 percent of all of the deaths in the United States happen outside of a hospital. An ambulance has a much better chance of preventing death outside of a hospital than it has of saving a patient who is in shock and that time is of the essence. If it takes a very long time to get to the hospital, that is not the time that a paramedic can use to save the life of the patient. Most of the reasons for a delay in getting the patient to the hospital are a result of the availability of EMS systems, which is unfortunately many areas in the United States. Many towns throughout the United States are still not providing EMS in the cities or towns. In reality, that is even taking a car or even a motor scooter to the hospital and having a paramedic even assist with the travel. Safety: There is a growing concern by the public that they are being put in harm's way when they are going to get to a hospital and the EMS may not be coming. They may start without ambulances. Many times they may have to wait for a transport helicopter to come in because the ground units are not able to get to the location. The helicopter may be able to save the patient's life, but the ground units may not be able to get to the hospital as quickly as possible. Many times the helicopter only responds to a "Code 3" emergency, which is not an area that needs medical emergency transport. A lot of time the EMS call is an actual "Code 1" which means there is an emergency. Many times people do not know that they are going to need EMS. If someone has been having chest pains and actually needs to get to the hospital, but their family members are calling in and saying they need EMS, then that is not an emergency and may not be the right time for EMS to be called. By the time the call gets to EMS, it may be too late to actually get a patient to the hospital. Paramedics are trained to save people's lives, but they do not respond to every call, nor do they have the equipment to save patients' lives. A 911 call 6d1f23a050
