A: The error comes from multiple column names being assigned to a single character identifier (the "smart" in smartarray). You need to either: modify each column name, either to a quoted alias: ALIAS = "Manufacturer; Model; Serial Number" or to a real identifier: ALIAS = "Manufacturer ID; Model ID; Serial Number" remove the ; and quote the identifier name, so it is read as a string: ROW(Manufacturer ID, Model ID, Serial Number) While the parser does work in both cases, it will most likely error. The safer option is to assign aliases using the old style syntax, i.e. only adding the column name and nothing more to it: ALIAS = Manufacturer ALIAS = Model ALIAS = Serial Number This allows you to use standard syntax and will ensure that the column will be correctly quoted. The query then should be: SELECT ROW(Manufacturer, Model, Serial Number) FROM someTable WHERE someConditions You could use both the old style and quoted aliases simultaneously, if required. The parser should then be able to correctly recognize them as different columns. Before doing so, however, please try to use the currently available methods to fix the issue, such as using the new syntax, etc. These will most probably fix the issue for you without affecting the query syntax and any normalization you may be doing. See the answer from FelixIP regarding the current limitations of custom queries and Column alias documentation for more details. As per the comments from OP OP, here is an example of how to use the quoted alias approach: ALIAS = 'Manufacturer; Model; Serial Number' SELECT ROW(Manufacturer, Model, Serial Number) FROM someTable WHERE someConditions; La police de Nantes a identifié parmi les victimes du drame de voiture en fuite, un étudiant en médecine sous jumeau de Lui Tuer Kakholkar (46 ans) qui souffre d’une grave maladie. L’officier de police judiciaire a confirmé que le tueur est probablement un sous-jumeau du Shangri-La Kangri Hospital de Mumbai, qui a été acc

No problem about it. Tried to search the solution on Google, couldn't find a solution. All I got was advice to clean all the registry and temporary folders. I did and I still have the same issue. A: This may be related to the Windows Update using a LOT of CPU. Please download and install the free ESET update-definition: And install the free update: You should be fine now. Q: Three.js camera controlled by JS on client site I want to make a small game in which the camera is controlled by javascript in the browser's panel. How can this be done with three.js? I tried to build a function in the source code of the library which could be called in the JS on the browser's panel. However, I could not. How can I achieve this? Here is the JavaScript: function ChangeCamera() { var _rotation = 0; var _position = new THREE.Vector3(); var camera = new THREE.PerspectiveCamera(70, window.innerWidth/window.innerHeight, 0.1, 10000); camera.position = _position; camera.lookAt(_position); var rotationControl = new THREE.TrackballControls(camera, _rotation, _rotation); rotationControl.maxDistance = 1.0; rotationControl.minDistance = 0.1; } Now I want to make a function which can be called from the client side JS which changes the position of 6d1f23a050
